The Bill of Rights of the 1987 Philippine Constitution, particularly Article 111, Section 1, provides for "equal protection of the laws" – a specific constitutional guarantee of the equality of all persons. Under it, each individual is dealt with as an equal person in the law, regardless of who he/she is or what he/she possesses. However, when this does not happen in the realities of life, like the different and adverse treatment or discrimination against Muslims, Indigenous Peoples or Lumad Highlanders in Mindanao and elsewhere in the Philippines, then the constitutional state policy of social justice (Art. 11, Sec. 10) that those who have less in life must have more in law, steps in.

It is an established principle of constitutional law that the equal protection clause is not violated by a legislation based on reasonable classification, which rest on substantial distinctions; is germane to the purpose of the law; and is not limited to existing conditions only, and applies equally to all members of the same class. There are indeed substantial distinctions between/among the three classes of people in Mindanao – the majority Christian settlers (and their descendants), the Muslims or Moro people, and the Indigenous Peoples. Unfortunately, their interrelationships have been characterized, among others by a historical and current minoritization, marginalization, and discrimination in various areas of life. This condition must be addressed.

As part of the global community, the Philippines is aware of the United Nations declarations on religious intolerance, which have become more relevant in recent times. The Muslims in Mindanao and elsewhere in the Philippines are no exception. Thus, in keeping with the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, and the 1993 Resolution on the Elimination of All Forms of Religious Intolerance, this Act addresses religious and other forms of discrimination.

To be sure, discriminatory attitudes or practice will not be corrected by legislation alone, even penal ones like this bill. But these legislative sanctions, which are the contribution of Congress, are part of what should be a holistic response to the fight against discrimination.

In view of the foregoing, the immediate approval of this bill is earnestly sought.
