AN ACT
PROVIDING FOR SECURITY OF TENURE AND GRANTING SUBSTITUTE CIVIL SERVICE ELIGIBILITY FOR ALL NON-REGULAR AND REGULAR EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT WHO HAVE RENDERED AT LEAST SIX
(6) MONTHS OF CONTINUOUS SERVICE

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Social justice demands that the State provide full protection to labor including entitlement to security of tenure.

The 1987 Constitution upholds the full protection to labor. Section 3 of Article XIII States that, “the State shall afford full protection to labor, local and overseas, organized and unorganized, and promote full employment and equality of employment opportunities for all.”
Likewise, all workers “shall be entitled to security of tenure, humane conditions of work, and a living wage.”

President Rodrigo Duterte vowed to stop the practice of “endo” or labor contractualization. Yet, three (3) years into the Duterte presidency, labor contractualization has worsened and become even more widespread, both in the private and public sectors.

In the public sector, according to the Inventory of Government Human Resources as of August 22, 2017, there are 660,390 contract of service (COS), job orders (JOs), personnel out of the 2,420,892 government employees. This figure is more than twice the 282,586 contractual workers in the public sector in 2008\textsuperscript{1}. Top agencies in 2017 with most number of JOs and COS include the DSWD, DOH, DepEd, Judicial offices, DOJ, and DENR\textsuperscript{2}.

Contractualization is so prevalent that non-regular workers comprise a significant portion of the government’s workforce. From around 10\% non-regular employees in the 1990s, the contractuals comprise more than 31\% of the government employees in 2016.\textsuperscript{3}

In the Department of Social Work and Development (DSWD) alone in 2013, contractual workers comprise 20,840 out of the total 25,589 employees, or 81.44\% of the agency workforce.

In the country’s premier public tertiary school, University of the Philippines, in 2012, 44\% of the employees are contractual\textsuperscript{4}. In the University of the Philippines - Philippine General Hospital as of January 2018, 1,614 out of 4,461 health workers or 36.18\%, are contractual, job-order, casual or temporary workers\textsuperscript{5}.

Labor contractualization blatantly violates the worker’s right to security of tenure. Many of the contractual workers have worked for 20 years or more and were made to perform regular agency functions, yet were never regularized.

Aside from having no security of tenure, contractual workers have no or lower benefits, no social insurance protection, no right to self-organization, no promotion opportunities, have higher withholding taxes, and become targets of discrimination at work.

The Civil Service Commission, Commission on Audit, and Department of Budget and Management followed suit with the issuance of Joint Circular No. 1, s. 2017 on June 15, 2017, amended into Joint Circular No. 1, s. 2018, on the “Rules and Regulations Governing Contract of Service and Job Order Workers in the Government.” Like the Department of Labor Department Order 174-16 which widely criticized by workers, Joint Circular No. 1 further legitimizes labor contractualization and provides no guarantee for the security of tenure for non-regular workers in the public sector.

The Joint Circular stressed that JOs and COS workers in government agencies have no employee-employer relationship thus have no right to any benefit for government employees. This is despite the court ruling on the MWSS-COS employees case in June 30, 2005 that JOs and COS workers are de-facto employees of the government\textsuperscript{6}. Worse, the circular provides that starting from the year 2019 government agencies may only avail of outsource services through institutional contract of service or subcontracting.

Aside from contractualization, non-regular employees need to hurdle the civil service eligibility requirement as provided for in Executive Order No 292 or the Revised Administrative Code of 1987.

Many more regular employees have no civil service eligibilities despite having rendered years and even decades of continuous service. Many were hired prior to the institutionalization of the civil service requirements, or were hired in positions not requiring civil service eligibility. These employees have no opportunity for promotions to higher positions requiring civil service eligibility, despite years of service, meritorious performance or mastery of their tasks. This results to low morale especially among those who have dedicated their productive years working in the government yet were never qualified for any promotions.

Labor contractualization, in all its forms, must be stopped and workers regularized in both private and public sector. The government must set a good example by regularizing all its contractual workers, prohibiting and penalizing the hiring of contractuals, and ensuring the security of tenure of workers in government service.

This bill aims to prohibit all forms of labor contractualization in the public sector. It provides for security of tenure for non-regular employees. Further it grants civil service eligibility for all regular and non-regular employees who have worked continuously in the government for at least six (6) months.

There is an urgent need to correct the long suffering and injury wrought by the government itself to the government workers.

Passage of this bill, thus, is earnestly sought.
