In November 6, 1902, the Philippine Commission enacted Act 496, known as Land Registration Law, that created the Court of Land Registration (CLR) and the office of the Registers of Deeds. The Law institutionalized the Torrens System of registration whereby real estate ownership may be judicially confirmed and recorded in the archives of the government. The system took effect on February 1, 1903.¹

Upon the effectivity of Act No. 2374, the Court of Land Registration was replaced by the General Land Registration Office (GRLO), and on June 17, 1954 upon the effectivity of Republic Act No. 1151 was also replaced by the Land Registration Commissions (LRC). The Commissioner of Land Registration took over the powers and functions of the GLRO who was in direct control of the Registers of Deeds (RDs) as well as the Clerks of Court of First Instance in land registration cases. It was then that registry of deeds was established in every city and every province and branch registry was put up wherever else possible at the time.²

On February 9, 1981, the President of the Philippines issued Executive Order No. 649 reorganizing the LRC into the National Land Titles and Deeds Registration Administration (NLTDRA). This agency operated under the administrative auspices of the then Ministry of Justice and extended effective assistance to the Ministry of Agrarian Reform, the Land Bank of the Philippines, and other agencies in line with the Land Reform Program. In a Presidential Memorandum Circular of September 30, 1988, the NLTDRA was changed into the Land Registration Authority. This was in line Executive Order No. 292 dated July 25, 1987, instituting the Administrative Code of 1987, which took effect on November 23, 1989.³

It now has more than 2500 employees nationwide. And it has consistently increased its revenues through its registries of deeds for the past five years. Many new methods and techniques have been developed by the administration in the defense of the landowner. Time has not stymied the purpose of the agency but has honored its sense of duty to that of a fine new razor. In truth the authority is more active than ever, willing and able to be defend the integrity of the country’s Torrens system.⁴

In order to further strengthen the LRA and correct the perception that it is only tasked to protect the integrity and veracity of land titles, it is fitting to change the name of LRA into a politically correct title of Property Registration authority. After all, the Registry of Deeds fall within its ambit. Further, minor correction in the entries in land titles pose a big problem not only to the holder of the title but also to LRA as the correction of such entry requires judicial action.

It is the purpose of this bill to reorganize the LRA and rename it into the Property Registration Authority and provide it with the necessary latitude to correct minor errors in the entries in land titles without the need of a judicial order.

In this light, this bill is being filed and immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
