EXPLANATORY NOTE

Sex, sexual orientation and gender identity are characteristics of human beings that are frequently the cause of discriminatory practices, even when such characteristics are inherently private and do not impinge upon the rights of any other people. The role of the State in this instance is not to police morality or cultural norms — instead, the role of the State, particularly in a democratic republic, is to protect its citizens, all of its citizens, particularly those who are most vulnerable to abuse, and guarantee to all equal access to their rights under the law.

While the mandate of many of those in government comes from the voice of the majority, it is imperative that the government pay particular attention to those who are the minorities, those who are different, because to be different is often to be vulnerable, to be forced to deal with situations and circumstances that refuse to take those differences into account. The Philippine government must be a government that safeguards the interests and well-being of all of its citizens, not just the majority, not just the mainstream, in a manner that acknowledges and advances our common humanity and dignity. Equality and non-discrimination before the law is essential if the laws of a State are to have any worth at all, if these exercises of power are to be tools of good, rather than arbitrary and oppressive. This proposed bill, based on the consolidated SOGIE Equality Act (House Bill No. 4982) of the 17th Congress, intends to help guarantee such equality, by codifying and strengthening the stand of the State against any discrimination against its citizens based on sex, sexual orientation or gender identity.

MICHAEL EDGAR Y. AGLIPAY
