EXPLANATORY NOTE

Despite the Constitutional mandate that affirms the equality of men and women, gender inequality continues to exist in our laws that effectively justify the discrimination experienced by women in the society, in their workplace, and even at home.

To this date, women remain to be a minority on various decision making aspects in marriage and family relations. The Family Code provides both spouses joint administration and enjoyment of their property. However, the right of the wife becomes inferior whenever disagreement arises between the spouses because of the explicit provisions that favors the husband’s decision. In such cases, the wife is required to go to court to assert her right. Likewise, the Family Code grants the husband and wife equal parental authority and shared responsibility in raising their children. But the right of the mother is only secondary to that of the father. In case of disagreement between the father and mother the Family Code gives preference to the father’s decision, unless there is judicial order to the contrary, which the mother will have to get from the court for her parental authority to be recognized.

The foregoing circumstances proved the existing inequality between the rights of the husband/father and wife/mother under the Code.

Section 19 of The Magna Carta on Women (R.A. 9710) provides equal rights to both man and woman in all matters relating to marriage and family relations. Further, Section 12 of the Magna Carta, provides that the State shall take steps to review and, when necessary, amend and/or repeal existing laws that are discriminatory to women.

In line with the State recognized efforts to guarantee the rights and fundamental freedoms of women and in consonance with the Magna Carta on Women, it becomes imperative to amend the existing provisions of the Family Code to ensure that existing gender bias and inequalities be properly addressed.

The proposed measure, a re-filing of House Bill No. 3951 of DIWA Party-list filed during the 17th Congress, seeks to amend only the specific gender biased provisions of the Family Code, which explicitly favors the man/husband/father in the family. Specifically, the bill seeks to amend articles, 14, 96, 124, 211 and 225 of the Family Code to ensure the fundamental equality of men and women relative to marriage and family relations and promote gender equality in society and at home.
