One of the developmental challenges identified during the workshop of the economic sector was the problem on the farmers’ low income brought about by high cost of production. To address this issue, the sub-sector on agriculture identified the establishment of an agri-tourism farm as one of the possible solutions to the said problem.

In view of the vast agricultural lands of Solano lies the challenges faced by the farmers. The tourism industry of Solano on the other hand has the potential to augment the promotion of the agricultural sector through integrating activities that will help in sustaining these two competitive sectors.

Although there are about forty-one (41) accredited agri-tourism sites located in the Philippines, the concept of integrating agriculture and tourism activities is relatively new in the province. The introduction of this project is therefore viewed as an attractive venture to the public.

The Solano Integrated Agri-Tourism Center or SIATC is a five-hectare agri-tourism site located at the rural barangay of Uddiawan, Solano, Nueva Vizcaya. Its components include among others the rice production area, vegetable production area, orchard production area, and greenhouse, fishpond, training center, guest house, and office and processing area.

It is the project’s main objective to provide economic benefits through increased job opportunities for farmers. Aside from the economic benefits that can be derived by the farmers and the local government from this project, social and environmental benefits of long-term and immediate effects are most likely to be generated.

Upon its operation, it is expected to benefit 6,590 workers from the agricultural sector and the 38 tourism-related establishments within the municipality. The National government Agencies (NGAs) such as the Department of Agriculture (DA), Department of Tourism (DOT), Bureau of Fisheries and Aquatic Resources (BFAR), Department of Science and Technology (DOST), Department of Trade and Industry (DTI), and Philippine Statistic Authority (PSA) are the LGU’s partners in its implementation. Private sectors and LRIIs are likewise included.
This project, when developed and managed appropriately could significantly offset the socioeconomic fallout resulting from declined incomes in farming areas. The increased tourist arrival, expansion of business, and increased job opportunities will contribute to the income improvement of family, community and government.

Hence, the immediate passage of this bill is earnestly requested.
