EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Philippine government, as a signatory to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UN CRC), is obliged to ensure that the best interests of the child must be the primary consideration in all actions concerning children, including those undertaken by legislative bodies. It also has a primordial duty to take all appropriate measure to ensure that children are protected against all forms of discrimination.

The Family Code of 1987 contravenes this duty of the State when it discriminates against children conceived or born out of wedlock. It is prejudiced against "illegitimate" children, or those conceived or born out of marriage, who cannot and should not be faulted for their parents’ marital impediments in the first place. Yet, these children suffer the consequences because of this infirmity in the law.

Article 177 of the Family Code (Executive Order No. 209, as amended) provides that only children conceived and born outside of wedlock of parents who, at the time of the conception of the former, were not disqualified by any impediment to marry each other, may be legitimated.

This may be interpreted to mean that a child who was born outside of wedlock may never be legitimated, if at the time of his/her conception, his/her parents were disqualified by any impediment to marry each other. The child may therefore carry an illegitimate status all his/her life.

For example, a child born to a couple, one or both of whom is/are below eighteen years of age, will never have the opportunity to be legitimated under Articles 177-182 of the Family Code. Under the existing legal procedure, to legitimize a child who was born in such situation, parents will adopt their every own natural child. Yet, the adopted natural child has less successional rights compared to that of his or her full-blooded sibling who was born when their parents are already legally married.

If the parents who were earlier disqualified to marry each other, but are later on allowed under the law to marry, there is no reason why their child born out of wedlock should not be legitimated by their marriage when the impediment ceases to exist.

This situation is unjust and discriminatory against the child.

The rights of a legitimate and an illegitimate child are not equal in the eyes of the law. Illegitimate children have lesser rights compared to legitimate children. In terms of inheritance, the illegitimate child is entitled only to one-half of the inheritance of a legitimate child. In terms of name bearing, an illegitimate child cannot use the surname of the father without an established filial recognition.

This bill seeks to redress such situation that discriminated against the rights of children just because they are born out of their parents’ mistakes. Furthermore, this bill advocates for the consideration of all children as legitimate.
The urgent passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
