EXPLANATORY NOTE

Eastern Visayas is located at the very heart of the Philippines, with the islands of Samar and Leyte serving as island bridges between the country’s northern island of Luzon and the southern region of Mindanao. One of the most ecologically diverse regions of the country, the three islands of Samar, Leyte, and Biliran are blessed with land, mineral, energy, and marine resources, making it favorable for agricultural, fishery, and industrial potentials. Its geothermal resources have also been tapped, producing electricity for the national power grid. Its coconut, abaca, and other agricultural produce have contributed toward increasing the national economic supply. But in spite of its immense potentials and vast resources, Eastern Visayas remains one of the poorest regions in the country today.

In 2013, Typhoon Haiyan, one of the strongest typhoons in recorded human history, flattened parts of Eastern Visayas, leaving behind a trail of devastation that has tragically resulted in loss of lives, livelihood, and property. But even as it rises from the typhoon, the region continues to be caught up in the vicious cycle of poverty.

Even before Typhoon Haiyan struck, the incidence of poverty has already been worsening. While the nation’s overall economic situation has been improving on the average, poverty in the region worsened from 2006 to 2012. In 2014, poverty incidence was at 54.9 percent; more than half of the region’s population of 4.10 million is now extremely poor and unable to earn the minimum amount necessary to address their basic needs.
The recent typhoon has aggravated this already deplorable situation, with the poor becoming desperately poorer. Following the recent latest Family Income and Expenditure Survey (FIES) conducted in 2015, four of the six provinces in Eastern Visayas are among the country’s top twenty poorest provinces: Leyte (ranked 17th at 46.7% poverty incidence), Western Samar (ranked 14th at 49.5%), Eastern Samar (ranked 11th at 50%) and Northern Samar (ranked 4th at 61.6%).

Our post-Haiyan situation has already revealed the vulnerability of the poor to long-term poverty as a result of major natural disasters. This is particularly the case for the poor residing in Eastern Visayas. This vulnerability to poverty arises because many of the poor are living just above the poverty line and mainly rely on income from agriculture. Income inequality, especially in Eastern Visayas is very high. Incomes of the poor are low and they have minimal savings to provide a buffer from the disaster. Remittances will be an important part of families coping strategies, however, the poorest have lower access to remittances compared to the better off families.

Given this situation in Eastern Visayas, there is a need to establish an effective institutional mechanism to be exercised through a unified responsive agency. This will address the need for a coordinated and integrated approach in the formulation and implementation of the plans, programs and projects geared towards economic growth and development in the region, including the establishment, among others, of special economic zones and support of the required social innovations.

This measure seeks to enact the creation of the Eastern Visayas Development Authority, a proposed development agency mandated to promote, coordinate and facilitate the active and extensive participation of all sectors to effect the socioeconomic development of Eastern Visayas.

By providing an integrated and coordinated direction to the agricultural, industrial, economic and social development, EVDA will serve as the lead agency tasked to steer the sound and balanced industrial, economic and social growth of Eastern Visayas and carry on with the speedy rehabilitation in the aftermath of typhoon Haiyan. To this end, EVDA will craft and implement programs and projects that will increase trade, tourism and investments in the region, encourage private enterprise and advance efforts towards progress and development.

Once the promise of a resilient economy is fulfilled, the right economic and social conditions will be realized - one that will provide jobs to the people, especially those in rural areas, increase their productivity and their individual and family income, and thereby improve the level and quality of their living conditions.
In view of the foregoing, the passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
