HOUSE BILL NO. 1350

Introduced by Rep. Precious Hipolito Castelo

EXPLANATORY NOTE

With the country breaching the 100 million mark in terms of population, whatever food sufficiency program the government has in place could definitely use an upgrade. Citing Senator Grace Poe, there is a need for the comprehensive re-engineering of the government's policies on hunger and malnutrition, given that at least 9.3 million Filipino families considered themselves as "food-poor" and 7.36 million children below the age of five were malnourished.

Senator Poe said in a privilege speech that despite the reported economic growth, hunger was evident not just in official statistics but in the streets. Senator Poe delivered her speech after the Social Weather Stations released the results of its third quarter 2014 survey on hunger. The results showed that around 12.1 million families considered themselves poor.

The SWS poll also found that 55 percent of respondents considered themselves poor – three points higher than the 52 percent average in the four quarters of 2013.

In order to achieve lasting food sufficiency program, there should be a government office that would exclusively zero in on food security and tasked to guarantee food security throughout the land.

A specific funding allocation in the amount of twenty billion pesos should be sourced for the successful operation of the office. Funding could be sourced from the revenue generating agencies of the government such as PCSO and PAGCOR, which as it stands, effect redundant allocations to other departments such as DepEd and DOH. Hence, if specific allocations from these two revenue-generating agencies were allocated where there is more pressing need such as food sufficiency, then the government could achieve food security.

Hence, this bill seeks to create the Office of National Food Security under the Office of the President.

The immediate passage of this measure is earnestly sought.
