EXPLANATORY NOTE

This bill seeks to mandate schools and universities to identify the types of disasters to which they are prone and to mandate the posting of warning signs and illustrations for the information of the school community, especially the students and parents. It aims to 1) establish a grading system for schools and universities by which their vulnerability to disasters is quantified; 2) inform the school community, especially the parents and children, of the vulnerabilities of the school to disaster, and 3) establish and practice a comprehensive disaster preparedness and emergency plan specifically designed for the school.

In 2010, Republic Act 10121, or the Philippine Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Act was passed. It adopted a disaster risk reduction and management approach that is holistic, comprehensive, integrated, and proactive in lessening the socioeconomic and environmental impacts of disasters including climate change, and promote the involvement and participation of all sectors and all stakeholders concerned, at all levels, especially the local community.

Through the years, we have opened public schools in disaster-prone areas to serve as the refuge of evacuees, people who have lost their homes or are in grave danger if they remain in their homes. However, we have also seen our very own schools succumb to disaster. We have seen our children wade through the floods with their heavy backpacks in the pouring rain. We have seen students step on dilapidated chairs to avoid the murky floodwaters that invaded their classroom. A few years ago, we saw a Bicolano child, Janella Lesis, brave the pouring rain and the strong winds to save a Philippine flag that was blown away from her school’s flagpole.

It is therefore of paramount importance that the parents, prior to enrolling their child in a school, are made aware of the possible risks that their child might face while in the school premises. More importantly, students must know how to act as a quick response to an oncoming disaster.

In light of all these circumstances, the swift passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
