EXPLANATORY NOTE

The 1987 Constitution has laid a very clear policy on giving our citizens access to information on matters of public importance. Article II Section 7 thereof clearly provides:

"The right of the people to information on matters of public concern shall be recognized. Access to official records, and to documents and papers pertaining to official acts, transactions, or decisions, as well as government research data used as basis for policy development, shall be afforded the citizen, subject to such limitations as may be provided by law."

The Constitution does not only emphasize this as a policy, but recognizes the same as a constitutional right of the people. To date, however, over three decades after the Constitution became effective, Congress has yet to enact a law that ensures that this constitutional provision, which is of vital importance to our democracy, is realized. Studies have shown that the lack of policies and mechanisms for transparency in governance has been a major cause of corruption and abuse in government and the deprivation of the people of participation in critical policy decision making processes affecting them.

This bill seeks to institutionalize the recognition by the State of the right of the people to information on matters of public concern and adopts and implements a policy of full public disclosure of transactions involving public interest, subject only to such procedures and limitations provided for thereunder. Generally, the measure seeks to allow access to information pertaining to official acts, transactions, or decisions, and research data, of all government agencies, institutions, entities and bodies, including government-owned and controlled corporations.

The bill, however, recognizes that the constitutional right to information on matters of public interest is not absolute. The bill, thus, provides for certain limitations, particularly on concerns involving national defense, public safety, international relations, information in executive sessions, drafts in the exercise of adjudicatory and/or audit functions, personal information and privileged communication.

The bill, if enacted into law, will serve as a vital legislation that will ensure transparency, accountability, efficiency and public participation in governance. It shall empower our people to access information of public importance, monitor the performance of public officials and encourage them to consistently perform their mandates, and hold them accountable should they violate the same or depart therefrom.

In view of the foregoing, the immediate passage of this bill is most earnestly sought.

The remedies under this section shall be sought or granted without prejudice to any other administrative, civil or criminal action covering the same act.
