AN ACT
MANDATING THE OBSERVANCE OF 23 NOVEMBER OF EVERY YEAR
AS NATIONAL CONSCIOUSNESS DAY TO END IMPUNITY, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

EXPLANATORY NOTE

November 23 is the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists as proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly in 2013 in commemoration of the assassination of two French journalists in Mali on that same day and year.

In the Philippines, November 23 is also remembered as one of the grimmest incidents where 58 men and women were massacred in Ampatuan town of Maguindanao province in 2009. It is also the worst attack on press freedom in Philippine history because 32 of the victims were media practitioners. Marking it as a National Consciousness Day to end Impunity will remind us that as long as high crimes remain unpunished, the fight against injustice in the country should continue to broaden and persist.

The Philippines has been tagged by international media groups as one of the most dangerous places for journalists being ranked poorly or is placed among the worst worldwide for unsolved journalist murders. Key witnesses end up dead or forever fear for their lives like the ones in the Ampatuan Massacre case, some of whom were murdered, with one of them even dismembered and mutilated.

The Ampatuan massacre case is now on its 10th year and there is still no positive light for the convictions of the Ampatuans and their minions. More than 100 suspects are already in custody while around 90 are still at large. Very recent reports say that some of the victims’ families have agreed to settle with members of the Ampatuan clan and to sign an affidavit putting the blame for the massacre on former Maguindanao Gov. Toto Mangudadatu.
Impunity exists whenever perpetrators of a crime are not prosecuted or are not held accountable because of their power or influence in society. Families of the victims of extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances and other human rights violations point to state security forces but to no avail.

The term “impunity” has attained prominence and common usage during the previous Arroyo administration. Former President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s nine-year term suffered from corruption issues, electoral fraud and worsening poverty of its citizens thus the discontent of the populace over her leadership, and increasing calls for her ouster. As a response to this growing dissent, the human rights situation under Arroyo turned to worse. Determined to stay in power, the administration institutionalized a campaign to repress forces critical of the administration through military and police force. A systematized human rights violation then took place and the result: 1,206 victims of extrajudicial killings and 206 victims of enforced disappearance perpetrated against activists and critics from among workers, peasants, women, indigenous people, students, lawyers, church people, and media practitioners.

Until now, no commitments were fulfilled to hold accountable high officials for the massive corruption and fraud under the previous administrations, and also for the gross human rights violations that will in turn serve justice to the people especially the victims. Further, killings and enforced disappearances in the context of the suppression of civil and political rights has already reached 250 cases for extrajudicial killings and 10 for enforced disappearances under the administration of President Rodrigo Duterte as of July 2016 to March 2019, according to human rights organization Karapatan. These killings are on top of the tens of thousands of people killed under the flagship anti-drug policy of the Duterte government. Men, women, pregnant, and children are among the victims of extrajudicial killings under the drug war.

The police continue to refuse or stall investigations, the military persists in making blanket denials and arrest warrants against alleged perpetrators have not been executed. The climate of impunity persists.

The killings have continued—and, have in fact worsened—under the present administration.

Thus, there is a need to instill awareness and spur action on the part of the government and for the people to stand up and fight for justice. The people’s clamor and demand for justice should continue to compel the government and the authorities to take action and prosecute those who are blanketed with impunity.

Thus, the approval of this bill is earnestly sought.
