EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Conditional Cash Transfer (CCT) programs aim to reduce poverty by making welfare programs conditional upon the receivers' actions. The government (or a charity) only transfers the money to persons who meet certain criteria. These criteria may include enrolling children into public schools, getting regular check-ups at the doctor's office, receiving vaccinations, or the like.

This CCTs seek to help the current generation in poverty, as well as breaking the cycle of poverty for the next through the development of human capital.

Some few development initiatives have been evaluated as rigorously as CCT programs. The implementation of conditional cash transfer programs has been accompanied by systematic efforts to measure their effectiveness and understand their broader impact on household behavior.

CCTs have affected not only the overall level of consumption, but also the composition of consumption. There is a good deal of evidence that households that receive CCTs spend more on food and, in the food basket, on higher-quality sources of nutrients than do households that do not receive the transfer but have comparable overall income or consumption levels.

CCTs have resulted in sizeable reductions in poverty among recipients—

Thus, the early passage of this bill is earnestly requested.

MICHAEL L. ROMERO Ph.D.

Most especially when the transfer has been sufficient, well targeted, and structured in a way that does not discourage recipients from taking other actions to escape poverty.

This House Bill seeks to foster the continuity and acceleration of the Conditional Cash Transfer program.

Thus, the early passage of this bill is earnestly requested.
