AN ACT
RATIONALIZING THE ECONOMIC REGULATION OF WATER UTILITIES, CREATING THE WATER REGULATORY COMMISSION, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Based on the 2015 Family Income and Expenditure Survey of the Philippine Statistics Authority, 87.2% of the population has access to water from formal providers, but only 43.6% have piped connection, while 11.2% use communal faucets, and the other 45.2% rely on point sources. The remaining 12.8% of the population use various means of getting water, including fetching water from rivers, digging shallow wells, or buying vended water. On wastewater treatment services, coverage is dismal. Roughly 4% of the population is connected to sewerage systems. It is only in Metro Manila where the service providers, in this case private concessionaires, have a program for septage management services and future plans to put in place improved wastewater treatment collection and treatment services. The inadequate safe water and wastewater services result to significant economic losses, attributed to health costs, losses from tourism and fisheries industries. Diarrhea, the most significant waterborne disease, remains as one of the leading causes of morbidity and mortality in the Philippines, an easily preventable disease.

The problem is not in access alone; the water supply level of service (i.e. from point sources or communal faucets to piped connection) and quality of service (e.g. achieving 24/7 supply, adequate pressure, and drinking water quality) has to be improved considerably also.

While there are many facets to the problem, poor economic regulation has been identified as a critical structural weakness in the sector. Because of the lack of or poor enforcement of economic regulations, water utilities are not compelled to expand coverage or improve quality of service, tariffs are not set rationally, operations are not efficient, and few service providers are financially viable. The inability of the formal service providers to expand coverage encouraged work-around solutions that eventually aggravated the problem including spawning of many small-scale water service providers. Based on the nationwide registry of water service providers, there is an estimated 23,603 water service providers from 1,451 municipalities and cities in the Philippines, 90% of which have connections of less than 5,000. Hence, by and large, there are no economies of scale resulting to inefficiencies and inherent limitations for growth.

In the Philippine context, poor economic regulation is a result of fragmentation; there are several agencies doing economic regulation, (e.g. Local Water Utilities Administration, Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System, Local Government Units, National Water Resources Boards, Tourism Infrastructure Economic Zone Authority, etc.). Apart from the National Water Resources Boards, regulators have conflicts of interest in their dual role as financier, as in the case of Local Water Utilities Administration, or as direct service providers, as in the case of municipal or city governments, thus, effectively practicing self-regulation.

This bill intends to address the issue of fragmentation through the rationalization of the economic and administrative regulation of water utilities through an independent, quasi-judicial body called the Water Regulatory Commission. Among its functions will be to enforce service coverage and quality of performance targets, toward the objective of providing every Filipino safe water supply and adequate wastewater services.

The immediate passage of this bill is, thus, earnestly sought.
