EXPLANATORY NOTE

The 1987 Constitution secures the right to health through Section 11. Under this provision, the State is mandated to make essential goods, health, and other social services available to all the people at an affordable cost. Under the Local Government Code, the implementation of national health care programs and delivery of public health services have been devolved to the local government units. Since then, the barangays have been in the frontline, ensuring that these public services in relation to health care, are readily available and easily accessible to the people at all times.

The Barangay Health Workers (BHWs) serve as the front-liners of primary health care in the community. In the absence of adequate health care professionals in communities, especially in the far-flung areas and provinces, the barangay health workers fill the gap by providing support in the delivery of essential health care services in barangay health stations. BHWs also report to the rural health units to assist in the implementation of local and national health care programs. Clearly, the BHWs play an important role in implementing national health policies and achieving national health care goals.

At present, the BHWs serve on a voluntary basis and receive only an honoraria from the local government units. Given the significant role of the BHWs in delivering health services to the community, this bill seeks to grant BHWs standardized compensation that is equitable and reasonable, and recognizes their contribution to the welfare of those in their community.

In view of the foregoing, the approval of this bill is earnestly sought.
