AN ACT
ENSURING ACCESS TO SECONDARY EDUCATION BY CONVERTING ALL PUBLIC ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS INTO INTEGRATED SCHOOLS OFFERING COMPLETE BASIC EDUCATION AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

EXPLANATORY NOTE

There has been an alarming increase of elementary graduates who are unable to pursue secondary education because of the limited number of high schools accessible within their communities. Data from the Department of Education (DepEd) show that as of SY 2015-2016, there are only 8,159 public secondary schools as compared to the 38,688 public elementary schools. In short, there is only one public high school for every five elementary schools. Almost all barangays in the country have at least one elementary school as opposed to high schools which are usually found only in urban areas and population centers. As a result, 94.5 percent of school-age children are enrolled in elementary, while only 86.2 percent are enrolled in high school.¹

Furthermore, many children in the rural areas are not enrolled in high school. The shortage of public high schools, particularly in rural areas, possibly explains the alarming number of children who are not enrolled in high school. Despite basic education being free, students need to bear the costs for food, school materials, and transportation, among others. According to the 2011 Annual Poverty Indicators Survey, topping the list of reasons for not attending school is the high cost of education. Other reasons cited are far distances of schools, lack of schools within the barangay, and the lack of regular transportation.

Students are in need of an accessible high school within their community. The government should pay immediate attention and address the gross shortage in public secondary schools to reduce the number of out-of-school youths in the country. With the implementation of the K to 12 program, a more conscious effort to maximize the resources of the schools should be initiated in order to reach out to more students. Establishing more secondary schools will open opportunities for students to access complete basic education at a lower cost and meet the growing educational needs of the youth.

This bill therefore expands existing public elementary schools to become integrated schools offering complete basic education including high school. With easier access to an integrated school, students will be able to continue their education without too much additional burden to the students who have to deal with the long commute, as well as to their families who need to provide their children with additional money for their transportation expenses. This would also result in expected savings on the part of the government as the facilities of the existing school may be utilized for the incoming high school students, with only standard repairs and retrofittings required, and a few additional classrooms to be constructed, rather than creating a separate public high school in the area.

To complement the expansion of schools into integrated schools, this bill also provides that the DepEd prioritize the titling of the lands used by the public schools to provide a solid legal basis for land ownership and enable school authorities to have direct control and supervision over their school sites.

With the opening of more accessible high schools, an increase in student participation, survival and completion rates will be achieved and will eventually produce an educated citizenry that will hasten the development of our country.

In view of the foregoing, immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
