Tourism development, being one of the priorities of the Duterte Administration, entails world-class international airports that would also enhance trade and sustainable development. The Davao International Airport, the third biggest airport in the country, likewise experienced a drastic increase in travel. It now exceeds its passenger capacity of 2.2 million with its current passenger volume of 4.4 million (2018 data). It also welcomed a host of foreign airlines including Singapore Airlines, Qatar Airways, Garuda Air, and Cathay Pacific, among others. Despite the increase in flights and influx of travelers, the physical expansion of the Davao International Airport beyond its total land area of 217 hectares is no longer an option, given the existing and future developments in the vicinity surrounding the airport. By 2050, it is estimated that air traffic to Mindanao could reach 15.5 million for both domestic and foreign passengers.

Given the new development in travel, trade and commerce, it is imperative that an official alternate airport to the Davao International Airport be established. Not only will this alternate airport play a secondary role to the much-utilized Davao International Airport, but it will also be used for flight diversions in case of bad weather in Davao City, runway congestions, and other similar circumstances.

The best viable option is to designate Mati Airport in the City of Mati, capital of Davao Oriental, as the official alternate airport to Davao International Airport. Mati Airport is 35.5 nautical miles or 65.8 kilometers from Davao City and is the nearest existing fully operational airport in terms of flight distance. It has 1.63 kilometers of concrete runway, an apron, and an existing terminal building. Moreover, the Department of Transportation (DOTr) has already earmarked P200 million in FY 2019 for the improvement of Mati Airport, including the extension of its runways, thereby making it the most ideal and financially viable alternate airport.

By land travel, the City of Mati is 155 kilometers to Davao City on very well-paved roads. The city itself has sufficient number of hotels, business establishments, and tourist attractions to support incoming and outgoing airline passengers.

Support for this bill is earnestly sought.
