EXPLANATORY NOTE

Good Conduct Time Allowance (GTCA) is defined as the “privilege granted to a Person Deprived of Liberty (PDL), entitling him/her to a reduction of prison term for every month of actual detention or service of sentence as a reward for good conduct and exemplary behavior.” This definition is from the Uniform Manual of Time Allowances and Service of Sentence which was crafted by the Joint DOJ-DILG Committee and was first published on December 1, 2017. This Manual was created pursuant to the enactment of the Republic Act No. 10592 in May 29, 2013 which amended Articles 29, 94, 97, 98 and 99 of the Revised Penal Code (Act No. 3815).

The law recognizes that the judicious use of good time is an immediate and promising way to accelerate inmate release and alleviate prison overcrowding. The accumulation of good time credits can affect time served either by shortening the length of sentence to be served or by advancing the date when inmates become eligible for parole consideration. Good conduct time allowance or GCTA is earned through his demeanor while serving time in the prison system. It is something that is immediately reflected on his prison record as a tentative computation on the timeline of his incarceration. Barring any unfortunate incident, the prisoner deserves his freedom in a period of time, which is not according to the actual calendar date but rather on the legal correctional timetable.

RA 10592 amended the certain provisions in the Revised Penal Code which increased the allowable deduction from the prison sentence to qualified inmates thereby accelerating their prison sentence calendar.
The important amendments under RA 10592, among others, are as follows:

1.) It expanded the application of the good conduct time allowance for prisoners even during preventive imprisonment.

2.) It increased the number of days that may be credited for good conduct time allowance.

3.) It allowed additional deduction of 15 days for each month of study, teaching, or mentoring service.

4.) It expanded the special time allowance for loyalty and made it applicable even during preventive imprisonment.

The past weeks however have stirred a great deal of debate on R.A. 10592 particularly in regard to its application to those convicted of heinous crimes. This is largely due to the numerous reports on the alleged impending release of those convicted of heinous crimes and serving multiple life sentences. Case in point is that of Mayor Antonio Sanchez, who was convicted of several counts of Rape and Murder. Questions were raised as to how a felon like Sanchez whose bestial act the Supreme Court described as something “only the unthinking beast can orchestrate” can qualify for release under the law. Questions were also raised as to the “good conduct” of the former Mayor when it has been documented and proven that he was found, on multiple occasions, in possession of large amounts of shabu and marijuana. He was also living luxuriously in prison with the comforts of an air-conditioning unit, flat screen TV and cellphone. Even to this day, he maintains his innocence of the crime for which he was convicted. Thus, the debate as to whether those convicted of heinous crimes are entitled to Good Time Conduct Allowance.

Those favor of release of persons convicted of heinous crimes argue that these people are entitled deduction from their prison sentence their good conduct points. As Section 3 of RA 10592, which amended Article 97 of the Revised Penal Code and provided for an increased computation of allowable deduction for good conduct does not mention anything about persons convicted of heinous crimes, it is argued that its application should benefit all offenders including those convicted of heinous crimes.
This interpretation of the application of the Allowance for Good is NOT correct. A cursory reading of Section 3 would readily reveal that the exclusion contained in Section 1 of RA 10592 is carried in the application of the GCTA. The first line of Section 3 reads “The good conduct of any offender qualified for credit for preventive imprisonment pursuant to Article 29 of this Code...” There is no ambiguity here as this means that an offender who is qualified for credit for preventive imprisonment under Article 29 (Section 1) is also qualified to avail of the increased computation for GCTA. By necessary implication, those who are NOT qualified to avail of credit for preventive suspension i.e. those “recidivists, habitual delinquents, escapees and persons charged with heinous crimes are excluded” and therefore NOT QUALIFIED to avail of the allowance of good time. As stated, this provision is clearly unambiguous and does not need any further interpretation.

At any rate, and in order to remove any doubt as to the disqualification of recidivists, habitual delinquents, escapees and persons charged with heinous crimes to avail of Good Conduct Time Allowance, this bill seeks to amend further Article 97 of the Revised Penal Code so that the exclusion and disqualification of persons convicted of heinous crimes shall become explicit.

Accordingly, support for this bill is highly encouraged.

JONATHAN KEITH T. FLORES
AN ACT
FURTHER AMENDING ARTICLE 97 OF THE REVISED PENAL CODE TO EXCLUDE PERSONS CONVICTED OF HEINOUS CRIMES FROM THE APPLICATION OF GOOD CONDUCT TIME ALLOWANCE
