Explanatory Note

The 1987 Constitution, as the primordial governing law of the land, recognizes equality as a state policy. Towards this end, the State shall exert efforts to address all forms of inequality that endanger the very fabric of the Philippine society. The State shall recognize the fundamental right of every person, regardless of sex, age, class, status, ethnicity, color, disability, religious and political beliefs, sexual orientation or gender identity, to be free from any form of discrimination. It shall therefore intensify its efforts to fulfill its duties under international and domestic laws to respect, protect and fulfill the rights and dignity of all, to promote human dignity as enshrined in the United Nations Universal Declaration on Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, particularly the General Recommendation No. 28 on Non-discrimination Based on Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity, Convention on the Rights of the Child, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and all other relevant and universally accepted human rights instruments and other international conventions to which the Philippines is a signatory.

R.A. 9262 or An Act Defining Violence Against Women And Their Children has been recognized as an extra-ordinary measure that provided protection to women and their children against various kinds of violence. The Philippine society, however, is also composed of non-homogenous genders with diverse sexual orientation, gender identity and expression. These genders may identify with what is commonly called the LGBTQ Community. Our history is also replete with record of events that show that both women and the LGBTQ Community are marginalized sectors in the Philippine society, experiencing discrimination, violence and hate crimes. The United Nations has also released some evidence that violence in partnerships also happen to other genders and sex other than that of women. Thus, these other sexual orientation and gender identify and expression in partnerships need protection against violence and discrimination.

The State shall recognize the vital importance of understanding that diverse gender forms part of a person’s identity. The State shall provide equal protection to these marginalized sectors and denounce violence done against them. The State, in keeping faith of its mandate, shall prevent various economic and public accommodation-related acts of discrimination against people based on their sexual orientation, gender identity or expression. The State shall recognize that everyone is born free and equal in dignity and rights.

This bill, therefore, seeks to amend R.A. 9262, otherwise known as the “Anti-Violence Against Women and their Children Act of 2004” by expanding the coverage from women to all those who suffer violence from their partners.

This bill shall prohibit all forms of violence against partners and their children, in private and public life, and provides maximum protection and effective remedies for victims and punishment of offenders. Thus, the bill also expands the covered acts under R.A. 9262 to include electronic violence done against partners and their children.

In view of the foregoing, the passage of this bill is respectfully requested.
