House Bill No. 6513

Introduced by Honorable Danilo Ramon S. Fernandez

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The great Filipino statesman, Carlos P. Romulo, in his address delivered at the First Commencement Exercises of the Emilio Aguinaldo College, on March 29, 1981 in Dasmarinas, Cavite, paid tribute to Generalissimo Emilio Aguinaldo, the president of the first Philippine Republic. He said Aguinaldo was a man whom we have not honored enough. The full measure of his worth, of his importance to his nation and history, lies obscured by controversy and legend. The full extent of the neglect by us of that part of our history is only now emerging, and we have missed the opportunity to recognize the great service to the nation by a leader while he was still with us. Quoting from his address, Romulo said:

"Ours antedated the Chinese Revolution, it was the first guerrilla war in Asia waged by a colonized people against not only one, but two, colonial powers, antedating Vietnam by a good fifty years.

Generalissimo Emilio Aguinaldo deserves a larger and more central place in the history of our struggle for self-determination and our national liberation. For he was the leader who made all these 'first' possible. His was a sustained drive toward the full independence of the Philippines, which came to grief only because at that time it was not yet fashionable for colonial peoples to be freed from the yoke of colonial rule, denying Aguinaldo the assistance of the International Community.

The habiliments of a traditional hero suited him ill - he was shy, prudent to a fault and remarkably unassertive. But he had one shining virtue: He had the will of iron in his undeviating pursuit of the ideals of his people.

National heroes come in different molds. Nehru and Washington were patricians.
But to find the closest analogue to Aguinaldo, we have to go back to classical times. He was the Cincinnatus of the Philippines, called to action by popular acclaim and by his own sense of duty."

In short, Aguinaldo contributed immensely to the formation of the Filipino nation. He bequeathed the Filipino people with our most important symbols—the national flag, our national anthem, and the country’s Independence Day.

He organized the first Filipino Republican Army and Navy, defeated the Spaniards in 1898 and held 9,000 of them prisoners.

Aguinaldo gave the Filipinos our first taste of independence and self-government under a republic that he established after more than 300 years of Spanish subjugation.

He led the defense of this republic against American aggression forcing the United States to deploy 125,000 troops and spend $400 million for a war that took more than six years to pacify.

Notwithstanding the calumnies and false accusations hurled against his person, Aguinaldo will remain a great Filipino hero. His legacy shall be enduring because his monument is not an imposing figure or obelisk, but, rather, according to Gen Douglas MacArthur, it is the Republic of the Philippines.

The country rightfully celebrates our heroes who played significant roles in our history.
December 30 is a national holiday in honor of Dr. Jose Rizal, and November 30 is celebrated to honor the Katipunan Supremo Andres Bonifacio. It is time to honor the Generalissimo and the country’s first president, Emilio Aguinaldo y Famy with a national day.

March 22, 1869 is the date Aguinaldo was born. At twenty-seven years old he won his first battle against the Spaniards which was followed by more military successes culminating in the liberation of the province of Cavite from Spanish rule, the first and only province to do so at the time. He led a revolution that spread not only in the different provinces of Luzon but also in some parts of the Visayas and Mindanao. At twenty-nine years old, he declared Philippine independence and established the first Philippine republic in Malolos, the first in Asia.

March 22, 1897 is another important date in our history. It is the date of the Tejeros Convention that elected Aguinaldo as President of the joint forces of the revolution. He was elected in absentia as he was at the frontlines of the Pasong Santol battlefield.

No other Filipino, past or present, can equal or even come close to his accomplishments in the defense of our country’s independence. It is, therefore, proper and fitting for a grateful nation to mark March 22 of each year as a national day to honor Generalissimo and first President Emilio Aguinaldo.
