EXPLANATORY NOTE

The outbreak of the Corona Virus Disease 2019 (COVID 19) has compelled our government to resort to the drastic measure of enforcing community quarantine so as to contain the spread of the said highly infectious disease. Consequently, schools all over the country are closed.

As the world is still grappling to find the cure, the shutdown of our education system will most likely be extended. Just recently, the Department of Education (DepEd) has announced that the new school year, which usually starts in June, will start in the last week of August this year.

During the hearing of the House Committee on Higher and Technical Education (CHTE) on April 30, 2020, the Coordinating Council of Private Educational Associations (COCOPEA) reported that in School Year (SY) 2018-2019, there are 30.7M learners in the country, of which 27.8M are enrolled in elementary and high schools and 2.9M are enrolled in colleges and universities. The report further indicated that 16% of the students in elementary and high school are in private schools, and 54% of the students in college are in private colleges and universities.

The extended closure of schools and the delayed opening of classes will adversely affect private schools as they incur huge losses due to uncollected tuition whilst continuing to pay for the salaries of their teachers and personnel. In addition to the unrealized tuition due to the delayed opening of the school year, private schools will most likely see significant decrease in their enrollment. Teachers and personnel in public schools are no exemption as well, particularly those who serve under contract, job order or under a “no work, no pay” arrangement.

Thus, in recognition of the significant role of education workers, both teaching and non-teaching, play in the development of our nation’s human capital, this bill seeks to offer special assistance to teachers and staff of private schools and public schools who are so greatly affected by school closure due to public health emergencies and other crises.

Needless to state, human capital is the primary force that drives national development. Hence, measures to safeguard the well-being of our educators must be adopted.

In view of the foregoing, consideration of this bill to address the intended purpose is respectfully requested.
