EXPLANATORY NOTE

Infrastructure development has been the centerpiece of this administration’s economic development program, ushering in the “Golden Age of Infrastructure”. The International Monetary Fund (IMF)\(^1\) reported that public infrastructure investment increased from an average of 3 percent of the gross domestic product (GDP) during 2011 to 2016, to 5.1 percent in 2018, with a projected investment up to 6 percent of GDP by 2022. Despite the ongoing increase in government spending on infrastructure, we are still behind in the Global Competitive Index infrastructure assessment.

Boosting infrastructure development remains crucial in recovering from economic setback, especially with the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic to the economy and the livelihood of our agricultural and tourism sectors. Building roads and bridges improve access to goods and services, reduce prices due to lesser transportation costs, and attract more investments as economic opportunities become distributed in many areas in the country.

In response to the increasing need to improve infrastructure, a four-lane superhighway shall be constructed to link South Luzon Expressway, through the Toll Road 4 extension project, to the San Andres Port in San Andres, Quezon which serves as a point of entry for those coming from the Southern Luzon islands and Visayas to the Luzon island. The San Andres Superhighway shall cut travel time from Lucena City to the Municipality of San Andres by half, making travel to the port only two hours by car. With the TR-4 project, it will only take at least 3 hours from Metro Manila to reach San Andres port and board a RoRo.

This will also create a domino effect on infrastructure development as the increased volume of passengers and cargo will necessarily push for the expansion and improvement of the various ports in the country and the roads leading to those ports. Easing access to ports, in turn, will support the establishment of provinces as new centers of economic development in the country. In sum, this will contribute and serve as an impetus for inclusive rural growth.

In view of the foregoing, the approval of this bill is earnestly sought.
