HOUSE BILL NO. 2909

Introduced by Rep. Precious Hipolito Castelo

EXPLANATORY NOTE

When subscribers receive otherwise unsolicited, unnecessary, and unwanted messages or material/s via text which can be commercial offerings, promotions, advertisements, and surveys – these should constitute undue intrusion into the private space of mobile phone subscribers and therefore is deemed associated with some unforeseen adverse effects on quality of life and personal freedom.

Since these spam messages, whether they come from known or unknown sources should be regulated precisely because the subscribers did not ask for them, then the National Telecommunication Commission should exercise its disciplinary as well as regulatory powers over the telecommunication companies that 'father' these rather not-too-desirable and in fact, unwelcome developments.

The vicious and unregulated bombardment of these texts or messages gets in the way of the free, open, clean and supposedly unobtrusive personal and private use of legitimate mobile phone subscribers of their units in ways that please, satisfy, and supply their needs and the costs they paid for in their chosen post-paid or pre-paid plans.

It is never incumbent upon any nefarious source to stand in the way of this freedom of communication when, without mutual consent or at least the consent of the receiver, any mobile phone owner or subscriber, just receives any text or any message from known or unknown source unless with due permission or upon the demand of the receiver from the sender of such spam

This bill henceforth seeks to broaden and to grant regulatory powers that will enable NTC to effectively ban these unwanted and unsolicited messages under pain that telecom companies or service providers involved will be meted fines or their franchises be revoked.

Thus, the urgent passage of this bill is prayed for.
